

1795

In 1795 Thomas Cooper wrote that no part of Kentucky could be deemed “perfectly safe” from Indian attacks, except the area around Lexington. Both the Pittsburgh and Wilderness Roads are “liable to ‘perpetual molestations by savages’”

May: Two men hunting horses on the frontiers of Madison County were fired upon by a party of Native Americans. One of the men was killed.